HIRES' Rootbeer. At first thought there seems nothing unusual in this statement, and in our forefather's days it would have been a truism, for they gathered the roots and made the beer themselves, but times have changed and rootbeer has changed with them, until now the claim "there are roots in it" can only be fairly made of one rootbeer, and that is HIRES.

HIRES' Rootbeer is made from the most carefully selected roots, herbs, barks and berries, which are skillfully combined and then steeped exactly as our grandmothers did it. The extract so made has all the well known virtues of nature, and therefore makes a most healthful drink; but as a coloring matter it cannot hold a candle to what modern chemists can prepare. The chemicals used in making artificial preparations are very powerful. This accounts for their otherwise remarkable claim that one bottle will make from five to ten gallons; it being merely a matter of how strong a taste, or deep a color, the consumer may prefer. There is no such elasticity about HIRES' Rootbeer. It is made to do good as well as taste good, and a 5 gallon package (which only costs 25 cents) would no more make to gallons of good Rootbeer, than could the proper quantity of tea to make 5 cupfuls be expected to make 10 cupfuls of good tea.

The general question as to the relative merits of Rootbeers has been unmistakably decided by the people who purchased 2,880,278 bottles of HIRES' last year (far more than the combined sales of all other kinds); but when it comes to an individual selection, the consumer should keep in mind the fact that there are roots in HIRES' Rootbeer, and

Mr. Gladstone congratu-lated Mr. Cremer upon his finding a chance to strike in behalf of hamanity. He reviewed the history of the arbitration Harrison's address to the Methodist Council, in which Herrison's address to the Methodist Council, in which the President spoke of the limitations of international arbitration, and the impossibility of applying it to feeds of aggraphizement. The Behring Sea Tribunal bore testimony, he said, to the earnest attention given to the question in America. After toaching upon his own idea of a central rebunal with great powers, Mr. Gladstone ended with an eloquent appeal for a moderation of claims as the most effective means of preserving peace. The resolution, as amended by Mr. Gladstone, was unanimously adopted.

Among the interested listeners to Mr. Gladstone's speech was the American Ambassador, Mr. Bayard, who occupied a seat in the diplomatic gallery.

The report made by Mr. Elliott, who investigated the facts of seal life on the islands in 1872-74, and in 1800 was sent to renew his investigations in pursuance of a special act of Congress, was not published by the United States. He subsequently published the report himself, and in some parts of it he laid stress on the insufficient number of virile male seals there. This is one of the reports that Stakehard Webster quoted from to-day.
